3. Read the following passage, then answer the questions:

Mental health is an important aspect of our overall well-being. It encompasses our emotional, psychological, and social well-being. Taking care of our mental health is as important as taking care of our physical health. Self-care is an essential component of maintaining good mental health.

Self-care involves taking care of our basic needs such as getting enough sleep, eating a healthy diet, and exercising regularly. It also includes engaging in activities that we enjoy, spending time with loved ones, and practicing relaxation techniques such as meditation or yoga. Self-care can help reduce stress and prevent burnout. Mental health and self-care are interconnected. When we neglect our mental health, it can impact our ability to take care of ourselves. For example, if we are struggling with depression or anxiety, we may not have the motivation to exercise or eat healthily. This can lead to a cycle where our mental health continues to decline. It's important to prioritize self-care as a way to maintain good mental health. This can include setting boundaries, saying no to things that are not a priority, and seeking support when needed. It's also important to be kind to ourselves and practice self-compassion. In conclusion, mental health and self-care are essential components of our overall well-being. B Reading

(7 Marks)

3. Read the following passage, then answer the questions:

The way we work has changed significantly in recent years. Today, many people debate whether working from home (WFH) is more productive than working from a traditional office. Both environments offer unique advantages that impact how much a person can achieve during the day.

Working from home offers great flexibility. Employees can save several hours each day because they do not have to travel to an office. This extra time can be used for more work or extra rest, which often makes people feel more energetic. Additionally, a home office is usually quieter, allowing for deep focus without the constant interruptions of colleagues. For many, this quiet environment is the key to finishing difficult tasks quickly.

On the other hand, working from the office—often called working "on-site"—provides a structured environment. Being physically present with a team makes communication much faster and easier. If a worker has a question, they can simply walk to a coworker's desk rather than waiting for an email reply. This collaboration often leads to more creative ideas. Furthermore, the office helps people separate their professional life from their private life. When they leave the building, they feel their workday is truly over.

In conclusion, there is no single "best" way to work. Some people thrive in the peace of their own homes, while others need the social energy of an office to stay motivated. Many companies are now trying a "hybrid" model, which combines both styles. This approach aims to give workers the best of both worlds, balancing individual focus with team cooperation.

Choose the correct answer from a, b, c, or d:

1. What is the main idea of the passage?
   a) The history of modern office buildings.
   b) Comparing working at home and office.
   c) How to build a quiet home office.
   d) The best ways to communicate with teams.

2 According to the text, WFH employees save time by ....
a) waking up much earlier every morning
b) skipping all their weekly team meetings
c) eating lunch while they are working
d) avoiding the daily travel to work

3 What is one benefit of a quiet home environment?
a) It helps people finish hard tasks fast.
b) It makes the workday feel much longer.
c) It allows workers to sleep during lunch.
d) It helps people meet their new neighbors.

4 The underlined pronoun "they" in the second paragraph refers to ....
a) any employee
b) difficult tasks
c) office colleagues
d) remote employees

5 Why is communication often faster in a physical office?
a) Because everyone uses the same fast internet.
b) Because workers do not send any emails.
c) Because you can talk to coworkers directly.
d) Because the office building is very small.

6 We can infer from the passage that the hybrid model ....
a) is only used by very small companies
b) is a mix of home and office work
c) requires workers to travel much more
d) is the most expensive way to work

7 We can deduce that a person who hates noise would ....
a) prefer working in an office with colleagues
b) enjoy traveling to work every single day
c) choose to work from home if possible
d) stop working for any big modern company

B Reading

3. Read the following passage, then answer the questions:

Egypt is a land where people and places are deeply connected. For thousands of years, the Nile River has been the center of life. Most Egyptians live near its green banks because the water allows them to grow food. This connection to the land started with the ancient farmers and continues today. In the countryside, or the rural areas, life moves slowly. Neighbors know each other well, and they often share meals. This reflects the Egyptian value of hospitality, where guests are always treated like family.

In contrast, big cities like Cairo are crowded and busy, but the connection remains strong. Even in urban places, people gather in traditional cafes to talk and drink tea. These social hubs keep the community together. Furthermore, historical landmarks like the Pyramids and ancient temples are not just for tourists; they are symbols of national pride. They remind people of their long history and the strength of their ancestors.

The desert also plays a huge role in Egyptian culture. Many people visit the beautiful oases to find peace. The vast sand and high mountains show the power of nature. Whether it is a small village by the river or a skyscraper in the city, the environment shapes how Egyptians live, work, and celebrate. This bond between the soul of the people and the soil of the land is what makes Egypt unique. It is a relationship built on respect, history, and a shared future.
